Mas de la Serra is in the region of Matarraña which has become known as ‘Spain’s Tuscany’ and is easily accessible from Barcelona, Valencia or Madrid.

There are many opportunities for engaging with nature and the wild surroundings: wild swimming in the many streams and plunge pools, watersports in the freshwater lake; the Via Verde cycle route; and the gorge walk experience at Beceite. There is also one of the longest zip wires in Europe in Fuentespalda.

The masia itself is isolated and offers wonderful walks amongst the almond groves and surrounding hillsides with breathtaking views. We are close to wonderful medieval villages, several of which belong to the new group of ‘most beautiful villages in Spain’ and are very low populated.

10. A Spanish takeover

Big multigenerational group? You might be able to score an exclusive hotel booking. Take Mas de la Serra in the sleepy Aragonese region of Matarraña, which has been likened to Tuscany because of its bucolic beauty, vineyards and hill towns. The converted eight-bedroom farmhouse — featuring a cinema room, a pool and, exotically, a Spanish-Peruvian restaurant — effectively becomes a private residence when you reserve it en masse. Just be sure to do so well in advance. There are vulture sanctuaries and safe river-swimming spots in the surrounding valleys, while a gothic castle atop Valderrobres scores cultural points. Top-notch pisco sours await each evening.

Details Seven nights' B&B from £940pp, including flights, car hire, cleaning and five dinners (realholidays.co.uk)

MAS DE LA SERRA

En lo más profundo de los barrancos del Maestrazgo de Teruel, entre pinasres y almendros, esta masía fortificada del XVII presume de ser uno de los alojamientos más remotos de Europa, el lugar ideal para contemplar el cielo, avistar animales salvajes (ibices, cabras montesas...) y salir de excursión en busca de trufas. También de tierras lejanas, de las Highlands de Escocia, procede su propietario, Alasdair Grant; de ahí su excelente bodega de whiskys y ginebras, en torno a la que organiza catas inolvidables (Matarraña, masdelaserra.com).
